Chatter

For April 27, 2015

'I'm going to be a good little hunk and shut up.'

—KIT HARINGTON, after stating that all of the attention to his looks is "slightly demeaning"

'When Sofia Vergara says your boobs look good, you know you've arrived.'

—REESE WITHERSPOON, joking about her Hot Pursuit costar's, ahem, observations, in ENTERTAINMENT WEEKLY (on newsstands now)

'I'm like, "You need to calm down—please calm down, relax."'

—ADAM LEVINE, on reacting to a rather unexpected fan attack during a Maroon 5 show

Q & A

Lori Loughlin

The actress, 50, stars in When Calls the Heart (Saturdays on the Hallmark Channel)

Is it hard being away from your teen daughters while filming?

I've worked out a schedule that is good for my husband [Mossimo Giannulli] and family. You think it gets easier as they get older, but I think we're in the thick of it now.

Do you still get recognized from Full House?

I'm so proud multiple generations have grown up on it. I only have fond memories.

What's the secret to your long career?

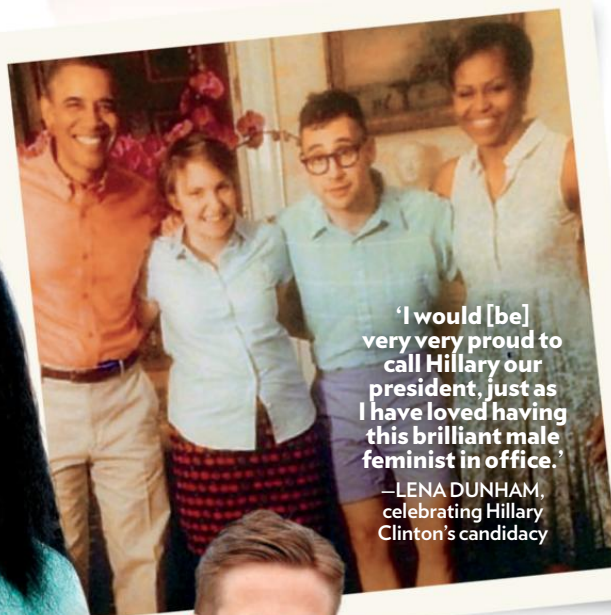

An actor always thinks each job is their last. But I'm not a quitter. I always keep trying and putting myself out there.

—PATRICK GOMEZ

'It doesn't matter where you started in your life. You too can become a mogul and anything you want to be.'

—NICKI MINAJ, on her advice for young girls

'I would [be] very very proud to call Hillary our president, just as I have loved having this brilliant male feminist in office.'

—LENA DUNHAM, celebrating Hillary Clinton's candidacy

'In high school, every time you stuck your neck out there was always a bunch of people there ready to chop your head off. Hollywood's not different.'

—RYAN GOSLING, on how his teen years prepped him for the spotlight

PETHOOD. IT'S JUST LIKE PARENTHOOD.
EXCEPT WITH OCCASIONAL FLEAS,
HARDER BATH TIMES AND NO
EYE ROLLING IN THE TEENAGE YEARS.

Whether they have two legs or four. Whether they've got fur, scales or feathers. They're your kids. They are Jack, Lucy and Daisy (and Jellybean, Sir Puffbottom and Special Agent Chesterfield). And you are their doting parents. When you think about it, the love you share is exactly the same. Your dog isn't your friend—he's your boy. Your cat isn't a pet—she was in your wedding. And at PetSmart, we aren't just fellow pet parents, we're your partner. We don't stop at just selling your favorite brands, we offer grooming, vet care and boarding all in one place. Because that's what a partner does. Of course, nobody will love your kids as much as you do. But we'll get close.

Garth Brooks

Kudos to Garth Brooks for making such a loving choice to be a stay-at-home dad. Unfortunately, many more fathers and mothers would love to be able to do the same but cannot because of the pressure today on working parents.

Pam Marci via e-mail

Garth Brooks definitely has his priorities straight! He will never regret his decision to raise his daughters and be there for them during those formative years. Now he can continue with his music career, which is still going strong, as indicated by his fans and sold-out venues.

Anita Carenbauer via e-mail

I would believe this story if he'd walked away years ago, before he made his millions.

Candice Bergen

Candice Bergen is talented, beautiful, funny and engaging. How refreshing to read about a celebrity who is willing to own her looks without pretense. Guess that makes her like many of us. I'm looking forward to reading her new book.

Dzhokhar Tsarnaev Guilty

It took a Massachusetts jury just 12 hours to find Dzhokhar Tsarnaev guilty of 30 felony counts for his role in the bombing at the Boston Marathon finish line on April 15, 2013. In part, his April 8 conviction was a foregone conclusion. During opening arguments, Tsarnaev's lawyer admitted her client's role in the attack. "It was him," attorney Judy Clarke told jurors. But

BOSTON STRONG

After the attack, which we wrote about in our April 29, 2013, issue, mourners made a memorial with flowers and running shoes.

Clarke maintained that Tsarnaev, 21, was not the mastermind of the attacks that killed three people and injured 260 others. She described Tsarnaev as a young man who committed the heinous acts at the direction of his older brother Tamerlan Tsarnaev. In the end, the jury was unswayed. At press time, Dzhokhar Tsarnaev faces the death penalty.

SURE, SHE'S TEACHING a prestigious human-rights course at Columbia Law School this spring, but Amal Clooney could add another hot-ticket class to the curriculum: How to Become a Glam New Yorker 101. Since the London-based attorney and her movie-star husband, George Clooney, took up residence in the Big Apple earlier this year, the globe-trotting newlyweds have fully embraced life in Manhattan. hard but also having fun together,” says a source who knows the couple. On April 12 Amal, 37, and her brother Ziad Alameddine visited George, 53, on the N.Y.C. set of Money Monster, a Jodie Foster-directed thriller costarring Julia Roberts, and the two were all smiles between takes as they held hands and walked their Cocker Spaniels Einstein and Louie. “Amal and George look happy and in love,” says a source in their New York social circle. “They’re spending time with other couples and friends who are bright and driven and interested in improving the world.”

The powerhouse couple, who tied the knot in September, have enjoyed romantic date nights (an onlooker who spotted them enjoying black truffles and each other’s company at Café Boulud recently says, “They were laughing and talking the whole time”) as well as hitting the town with an eclectic group of friends and family. On their packed dance card over the last few weeks alone: dinner at the home of Tina Brown and husband Sir Harold

Nicholas Hoult & Dianna Agron Having Fun in London

The Mad Max star, 25, and the Glee star, 28, are hanging out in the British capital. At the Gallery restaurant on April 3, “they sat down and had a conversation like everyone else,” says an onlooker. “They had a nice time.”

Bradley Cooper & Suki Waterhouse Reunited?

They split just before the Oscars, but Cooper, 40, and Waterhouse, 23, were spotted getting cozy at Coachella on April 10. The day before, the friendly exes had a dinner date before spending time at his house.

Emma Stone & Andrew Garfield Taking a Break

After three years, the couple put their relationship on hold. But a source says there might be hope for a reunion between Stone, 26, and Garfield, 31: “I am not convinced they are totally broken up. Give it time to play out.”

CONFESSIONS WITH JOSH GROBAN

THE SINGER, 34, WHOSE NEW MUSICAL-THEATER ALBUM STAGES DROPS APRIL 28, SPILLS SOME OF HIS SILLY SECRETS:

He gets confused with another famous singer

"[People think I am] James Blunt, quite a bit at one point. And Richard Gere all the time. Okay, that's only by my mom."

He has an inner rock star bursting to be unleashed

"If I wasn't singing I'd play drums in a heavy-metal band. I learned to play drums by listening to metal and hard rock, so when I play drums, that's what I play, and I get so into it. In the studio between takes, I'll try out my imitations of other singers. I wind up doing Eddie Vedder all the time."

He has a go-to pickup line

"Growing up, I was a theater nerd and the nerd in my class, so even saying hi was a really big deal," adds Groban. These days, he dates actress Kat Dennings, 28.

But if he was single, "I like the polar bear line: 'Do you know how much a polar bear weighs? It's enough to break the ice. Hi, how are you?' It beats Tinder!"

RITA WILSON MY BREAST CANCER FIGHT

"I feel blessed to have a loving, supportive husband," says Wilson (with Hanks last year).

SINCE MARCH 5, RITA WILSON had been hitting the stage eight times a week in Larry David's Broadway comedy Fish in the Dark. But almost a month into the run, she took an unexplained medical leave from the show. Now she's revealing her diagnosis: invasive lobular carcinoma, a type of breast cancer that begins in the milk-producing glands (lobules) of the breast. "Last week, with my husband by my side and with the love and support of my family and friends, I underwent a bilateral mastectomy and reconstruction," the star, 58, who celebrates her 27th anniversary with husband Tom Hanks on April 30, tells PEOPLE in an exclusive statement. "I am recovering and, most importantly, expected to make a full recovery. Why?

Because I caught this early, have excellent doctors and because I got a second opinion." Wilson says she has been "vigilantly monitored" through the years with mammograms and breast MRIs. Recently doctors were concerned about a finding and performed two biopsies, both of which came back negative. A friend suggested she get a second pathologist's opinion, "and my gut told me that was the thing to do," she says, adding that she is "getting better every day... I hope this will encourage others to get a second opinion and to trust their instincts if something doesn't 'feel' right." —ELIZABETH LEONARD

Lauren says becoming a mom to twins is "a dream come true."

Lauren, 40, tells PEOPLE. In addition to ruling an empire of hip candy stores, she's creating the nursery of her dreams in her New York home. And grandpa-to-be Ralph? "He's doubly thrilled!" says Dylan. "It'll be a whole new life."

BLAKE LIVELY LOOKS FROM THE AGE OF ADALINE

CLASSIC COUTURE

Lively and Strathie worked with Gucci (the actress is a spokeswoman for the brand) to create the looks Adaline wears in 1945 and 2014. "Believe it or not, cutouts were kind of a thing in the '40s!" says Strathie.

THROWBACK THREADS

Since Adaline "has this huge selection of clothes that have been gathered over the decades," says Strathie, her outfits borrow elements from various eras. Example: this retro dress and wavy do she wore in the '90s.

MOD MOMENT

In Lively's book, the '60s had two fashion strikes against them. "I never really wear that boxy shape," she says. "And the bangs!"

"I had a vision of what Adaline would look like through the decades," Lively, 27, tells PEOPLE of working alongside costume designer Angus Strathie to create her immortal character's wardrobe in The Age of Adaline (out April 24). The challenge? Keeping the essence of Adaline, who is eternally 29 after a freak accident in the 1930s, intact. Here's a selection of Lively's timeless onscreen style. —CATHERINE KAST

LADYLIKE LINES

The curve-defining silhouettes of the '50s suited Lively (with Cate Richardson). "I love cinched waists," she says. Adding another touch of authenticity: Purses and jewelry were sourced from vintage stores in Vancouver and L.A. costume houses.

DRESS ENVY

Did Lively (in another Gucci gown alongside costars Michiel Huisman and Ellen Burstyn) get to keep any of the clothes? "No, I wish!"

Clinton, 67, would be America's first woman president.

Hillary Clinton: It's On!

The former First Lady, Senator and Secretary of State makes it official: 'I'm running for president'

After months of will-she-or-won't-she guessing, Hillary Clinton is off and running for the White House. In a van. A van she's nicknamed "Scooby." The low-key April 12 launch of her 2016 campaign began with a tweet—"Everyday Americans need a champion, and I want to be that champion. -H"—a video (inset) and a road trip from New York to Iowa. "I didn't know in my lifetime a woman president would be so possible," marveled Carol Conklin-Spillane, 56, a high school principal with a cameo in Clinton's video. Except for Secret Service and an aide, Clinton's flying solo as daughter Chelsea and husband Bill hang back for the "near term," says a source. Opponents were quick to label the freshly-minted candidate, who also ran in 2008, a throwback. GOP Sen. Marco Rubio, 43, who launched his own bid April 13, called Clinton "a leader from yesterday who wants to take us back to yesterday."

PERSONAL STORIES ABOUT GIVING BACK

Stana Katic

The Castle star, 36, created a program to encourage car-free travel

People in L.A. joke that dating someone on the other side of town can be a deal breaker, because who wants to do "long distance"? Anyone who has experienced L.A. traffic understands the joke. On my end, I just thought there has to be a better way to get around town. When I visited Europe, I saw that walking and cycling is more fun than using a car to go about your day—and I think exposure to that lifestyle is what opened my eyes to the fantastic opportunity we have here. So I started the Alternative Travel Project in 2010 to encourage people to seek out different transportation options. Now, as we approach Earth Day on April 22, we have people across the globe volunteering car-free Fridays to a librarian in Minnesota who's battling MS and is walking to work in spite of her health challenges, the response has been phenomenal. It's a lifestyle choice that has a positive effect on your health and the environment. It just makes sense.

No. 1 Inside Amy Schumer

This may be the most inappropriate show your (older) kids should be watching

TV COMEDY Amy Schumer is vulgar and brash enough to make censors break out in a cold sweat. She's also producing some of the most socially relevant comedy on TV. Like Saturday Night Live at its best, Schumer's sketch-comedy show finds no hot-button issue too controversial—and Hollywood's hottest stars want to be part of it. In the first episode of the show's third season, Schumer is joined by The Good Wife's Josh Charles (channeling Coach Taylor in a Friday Night Lights parody that tackles sexual assault in sports); the all-star trio of Julia Louis-Dreyfus, Tina Fey and Patricia Arquette (throwing a party to celebrate ageism); and Amber Rose and Method Man (sending up the objectification of women in rap videos). Schumer's humor is always timely but never feels like homework. It's much more akin to an issue of National Geographic pubescent boys might enjoy: supereducational yet just a bit titillating. (Comedy Central, April 21, 10:30 p.m.)

LEGAL NOTICE

If you own or owned property with windows made by MI Windows, you may qualify for benefits from a class action settlement.

File an online claim now at www.MIWDTapeGlazedWindowSettlement.com

Para una notificación en Español, llamar o visitar nuestro website.

A proposed Settlement has been reached with MI Windows and Doors, LLC ("MIWD") relating to tape glazed windows manufactured by MIWD between July 1, 2000 and March 31, 2010. The lawsuit alleged water leakage and resulting damage to Class Members' windows and property. MIWD denies the allegations and there has been no determination of wrongdoing by the Court.

Who is included?

The Settlement includes both homeowners and contractors who own or owned a home or other structure with the included MIWD windows. A complete list of the windows covered by the Settlement can be viewed at www.MIWDTapeGlazedWindowSettlement.com. The website has photographs and detailed instructions on how to identify if your windows are part of the Settlement.

What does the Settlement provide?

If you have windows that are included in the Settlement, you may be able to make a claim for money, repair service or other benefits. The amount you may make a claim for will depend on a number of factors, including (1) the number of affected windows, (2) whether water leaked, causing a visible residue line, water staining or additional property damage, and (3) whether you previously paid money for certain repairs. Class Members may be able to receive monetary compensation plus replacement window sashes and repairs. The Settlement creates several categories of benefits. Visit the website for detailed information.

How do I make a Claim?

You can file an online claim now at the website. You can also download a paper Claim Form at the website or request one by calling the toll-free number below. There are multiple claim categories with different deadlines. The earliest deadline is October 26, 2015.

Your other options.

If you do not want to be legally bound by the Settlement, you must exclude yourself from the Class by May 28, 2015, or you will not be able to sue MIWD about the legal claims the Settlement resolves, ever again. If you exclude yourself, you cannot get money or other benefits from the Settlement. If you stay in the Class, you may object to it by June 1, 2015. The detailed notice available on the website explains how to exclude yourself or object.

The Court will hold a hearing, on June 30, 2015, to consider whether to approve the Settlement, and a request by Class Counsel for attorneys' fees, costs, and expenses of no more than $9,045,000 and incentive awards for the Class Representatives of $5,000. You or your own lawyer, if you have one, may ask to appear and speak at the hearing at your own cost, but you do not have to.

A single dad vs. a sociopath, the Vietnam War's emotional fallout and one woman's homage to shoes
EDITED BY KIM HUBBARD

WEEK

Marian Palaia The Given World

NOVEL The loss of her beloved older brother, presumed dead in Vietnam, sets Riley on a decades-long quest to dull the pain. She's a secretive heroine, as complex and haunting as the heartbreak she lives with. Packed with rich characters and locations (Montana, San Francisco, Saigon), World is a vivid and unforgettable debut.

Patricia Morrisroe 9 1/2 Narrow

MEMOIR This ebullient memoir chronicles a woman's life through the shoes she's loved, from the granny boots she donned as a smitten coed to the sneakers she gave her balance-challenged mom. Along with dispensing fun facts (Saks's shoe department has its own zip code), Morrisroe shows how our footwear tells our stories—and reveals our character.

Lisa Scottoline Every Fifteen Minutes

THRILLER In a sock-'em stand-alone, Scottoline, best known for her crime-busting female lawyers, takes a detour into the twisted mind of a sociopath. Dr. Eric Parrish is a respected psychiatrist and a great dad, but like a character out of a Hitchcock film, he finds his life becoming a train wreck after a series of bewildering calamities puts him squarely in the sights of the police. The red herrings come fast and furious; part of the fun is how skillfully Scottoline leads us astray.

NEW IN PAPERBACK

Diane Keaton Let's Just Say It Wasn't Pretty

In her charming second memoir, the idiosyncratic star and style icon opens up about beauty, Hollywood pressures and staying true to herself.

Jennifer Weiner All Fall Down

Sure, Allison has it all—but she also has a sick father, sky-high stress and a habit of popping pills. A powerful tale of addiction and redemption from crowd-pleaser Weiner.

Donna Tartt The Goldfinch

A terrorist attack takes Theo's mother and leaves him with a precious artwork that inexorably influences his fate. Tartt's immersive coming-of-age tale won last year's Pulitzer.

'We Feel So Blessed'

JUST DAYS AFTER BRINGING HOME SON
ISRAEL, THE DILLARDS SHARE THEIR DRAMATIC JOURNEY TO PARENTHOOD

By ALICIA DENNIS

“When I am holding my son,” says Derick (with Jill and Israel at home on April 12), “I feel so much joy.”

Baby Israel David Dillard is peacefully sleeping, his arms dangling as his father, Derick, cradles him in the crook of his elbow and his mom, Jill, stares at them both adoringly. “I love cuddling with him,” Jill says, beaming. “I love seeing Derick hold him and watching the two of them fall asleep.” Jill shifts gingerly on the sofa in the Dillard family’s living room in Rogers, Ark., managing a soft smile through the pain of recovering from the unexpected caesarean section she had five days earlier to bring her 9 lb. 10 oz., 23-inch son into the world on April 6. “His birth didn’t go as expected,” she admits. “But having him here—it’s worth all of it. I wouldn’t do anything differently.”

Coming from a woman who endured a dramatic labor that spanned nearly 70 hours, it seems like a shocking assertion. But for Jill, 23, the second-oldest daughter born into the conservative Christian Duggar family—made famous by TLC’s hit show 19 Kids and Counting—each painful, and sometimes scary, moment leading up to her son Israel’s birth was all part of a bigger plan, even if it wasn’t exactly part of the birth plan she wanted. “We took on everything that happened during our labor with prayer,” says Jill, a student midwife, who had hoped to deliver her baby in her home. “We could feel that God was with us.”

Israel’s big day was a long time coming. After first learning they were expecting just weeks after their June 21, 2014, wedding, Jill and Derick, 26, were anxiously awaiting the arrival of their little boy. When her March 24 due date came and went, “I told myself first-time moms often go a week and a half over, so don’t get discouraged,” says Jill, took to eating spicy foods in the hopes that it would kick-start labor. Finally, after 41 weeks and five days of pregnancy, her water broke in the early hours of April 4. With her contractions still intermittent, Jill managed to get some sleep, get in a morning appointment with the chiropractor—"I wanted to get aligned before birth," she says—indulge in a couple's pedicure alongside Derick and take a two-and-a-half-mile walk to get labor going. "We didn't tell anyone else that her water had broken," says Derick. Adds Jill: "We didn't want anyone to be freaking out."

When contractions became regular, Jill settled into the bedroom where she planned to deliver. Having tested positive for a common bacterial strain, strep B, that can cause problems during delivery, she began taking antibiotics via an IV, and then decided to take a dose of castor oil, a home remedy some feel can ultimately lead to increased contractions. Indeed, three hours later, the contractions began fast and furious. At this point the baby was head down, but the back of his head was against Jill's back, in what is known as a posterior position, which can make it more painful to deliver. "We tried different positions to move him," says Jill, who had hoped for a natural delivery. "I have seen so many people go through this, and I know what to expect, and I know it is going to be really hard," she says. "But I honestly thought the delivery would go quicker because my labor was so intense." To distract his wife, Derick played spiritual songs the couple both love and read Bible verses and inspirational sayings. "I was nervous," says Derick, "but I didn't want to show that or make her more fearful."

Jill, who says she figured her firstborn might be late, documented her pregnancy on Instagram with weekly bump updates.

But after 20 hours in labor—with contractions just one minute apart—Jill wasn't progressing, and her family began to get worried. Jill's mother, Michelle, her sister Jana, 25, and friend Rachel Goad, a fellow student midwife, were there helping out. "There were times I looked into her eyes during contractions where I wanted to cry. I know how horrific it is to go through that, and I did everything I could not to break into tears," says Michelle. Still just a few centimeters dilated, Jill saw a faint stain of meconium (the earliest waste of an unborn infant, and often a sign of fetal distress) and decided it was time to go to the hospital. "That was a blessing to know very clearly that we needed to go," she says. A second dose of castor oil then made the 40-minute trip to the hospital challenging. "I was praying to God to give me strength," says Jill. "I was really scared and nervous, but I was praying."

Once they were in the hospital, the complications continued. Jill initially declined Pitocin, a hormone that greatly speeds up labor, and tried to get by without an epidural before finally giving in to both the pain medication and Pitocin. "We were trying to exhaust

Josiah Duggar Starts Courting!

The day Israel was born, Josiah Duggar, 18, broke more family news: He has begun courting Marjorie Jackson, 17. With the blessing of his parents and hers (Greg, 43, and Analucia, 40), the couple are using a list of questions Jill crafted during her courtship with Derick to get to know each other. "We're learning a lot," says Josiah, who works at his father's real estate firm. Marjorie, with four siblings to Josiah's 18, is well-suited for a mega-family: "I love spending time with people, and I've always admired his family . . . and him."

all our options but do it within our birth plan,” she says. But by then, the baby had flipped into a transverse breach position (sideways and upside down), was experiencing irregular heart rates and had not yet descended. “The doctor did have some concerns,” says Jill, so the couple decided to proceed with a C-section before the situation grew critical. “She had labored for so long. There’s no shame in that, there’s no shame in not progressing, there’s no shame in getting a C-section,” says Derick. “It was confirmation for us that God was leading us,” says Jill. “We were grateful for God showing us what to do in time.” Hoping to have their own supersize family (“We want as many kids as God will bless us with,” says Derick), “we told the doctor, ‘Stitch me up really well,’” says Jill. (Doctors can sometimes advise against vaginal births after a C-section.) In her case, Jill says, “the doctor told me he has no doubt I’ll be able to have a vaginal delivery the next time.”

In the final minutes of April 6, with Derick scrubbed in and standing by to cut the cord, their baby son Israel finally arrived, screaming and squirming, weighing in at nearly 10 lbs. and setting a length record at the hospital for 2015. “I looked at him and said, ‘He is so beautiful,’” says Jill. With Jill in recovery, Derick bonded with Israel. “I sang ‘Jesus Loves Me,’ the song I’d sung to him every night when Jill was pregnant,” he says. “I looked at him and thought, ‘This is my son. I love this person.’”

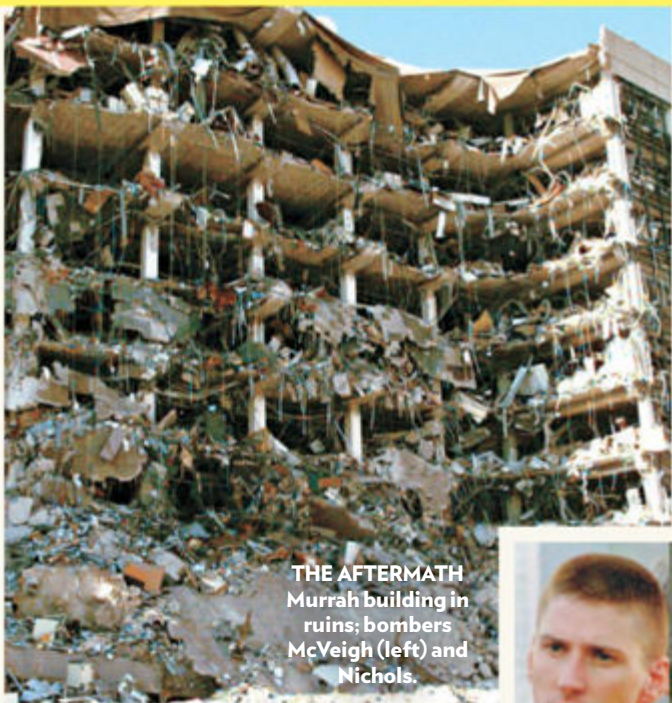

One week later Jill and Derick say all the pain, surprises and massive sleep deprivation are nothing compared to the joy they feel as proud new parents. Jill is nursing exclusively, and family members on both sides have been coming by to lend their support—including bringing new clothes for the little boy so big he never got to wear his newborn-size onesies. “My mother told me I could have had three children in the time it took me to have this one,” says Jill with a laugh. “I love our birth story because it bonded us so well. It brought us through something amazing together.” The new mother pauses and cuddles Israel a little tighter. “It was a journey that we needed to go through.” ●

The Youngest Survivors Reunite

PULLED FROM THE WRECKAGE OF THEIR DAYCARE

STANDING TALL
“I’m really thankful for every day,” says Allen (second from left,
with survivors, from left, Denny, Nguyen,
Webber and McCloud
at the bombing
memorial in Oklahoma City on April 12).

They greet each other with a quick handshake, these two former high school classmates now navigating their separate paths to adulthood. But Joe Webber and P.J. Allen, both 21, share more than a recent semester of Spanish class: Twenty years ago, on April 19, 1995, they were enrolled in America’s Kids Daycare inside the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building in Oklahoma City when a truck bomb detonated outside, killing 168 people. Of the 21 children in the daycare center that morning, only six survived. “I didn’t realize,” says Allen, who was then just a year old, “how close I was to not making it out.”

Too young to have firsthand memories of the tragedy, all six survivors, ages 1 to 5 at the time, do still bear its scars, both physical and emotional. “It’s a weight they’re trying to lose,” says Jim Denny, 70, the father of survivors Brandon, 23, and Rebecca, 22. “But I don’t think any of us will ever lose it. The one thing we’ve never asked is, why? There’s no answer.” (Timothy McVeigh was executed in 2001 for the antigovernment attack; accomplice Terry Nichols is serving multiple life sentences.)

PEOPLE gathered five of the survivors together to mark the bombing’s anniversary; only Rebecca, who is graduating from college next month and planning her wedding, was absent. Rather than revisit the past, the goal was to celebrate who they’ve become. Says the oldest of the group, Christopher Nguyen, 25: “God gave us a second chance.”

Grateful families joined in the happy catch-up. “That’s Joseph? Oh my God, you have grown up so much, I would never have recognized you!” blurted Allen’s grandmother Deloris Watson, 63, upon spotting Webber. Still, reunions are intentionally rare: “We try not to circle each other so much that it becomes a focus for them,” says Watson. The survivors already know what binds them. “I live with it every day, and I wouldn’t want to forget it,” says Allen. “Because it’s something that needs to be remembered.”

OKLAHOMA BOMBING 20 YEARS LATER

"He's not a quitter," says P.J.'s grandmother Deloris Watson (at his side in '95).

'The bombing affected us all, and we can't forget that'

P.J. Allen, 21 Age then: 20 months

Nothing about P.J.'s broad-shouldered appearance today hints at the blows his body took in the blast. His right lung collapsed. Second- and third-degree burns covered half his body. His left arm was broken in three places. Pieces of cinder block were embedded in the back of his head. After years of surgeries, he finally had his breathing tube removed when he was 11. "It was almost like I was being set free," he says. "I promised myself I would just seize opportunities and try my best at everything." Now studying hotel and restaurant management at a junior college in Stillwater, Okla., "I really just believe there's something I'm supposed to do, and I don't know what that is yet. I hope one day God reveals that to me," he says.

Brandon at age 3, after brain surgery.

'Not a day goes by when I don't think about those who died'

Brandon Denny, 23 Age then: 3 years

Rebecca Denny, 22 Age then: 2 years

For a while, Rebecca used the bombing as a yardstick to measure her life—and found herself failing.

"I am constantly bashing myself and telling myself that [the victims] would have done a better job if they were here," she wrote in a 2011 high school graduation essay. "So many lives were taken away that day, innocent lives, the only way I have been able to cope with this is to take everything in my own life and hold on to it." One of those things is her brother Brandon, who was the most seriously injured child to survive the blast. Although a piece of the blue plastic barrel that held the bomb cut a slice through Rebecca's left cheek, Brandon's injuries required four major brain surgeries, hampering movement on his right side and making it tough for him to get his words out. "Brandon spoke more until he was 3 than I've heard him speak in 20 years," says dad Jim.

Still, Brandon's easy good humor and determined attitude—an NBA and NASCAR fan, he works four days a week at a Goodwill distribution center and looks forward to moving out on his own—have helped his sister heal too. And he'll be on hand when Rebecca, who will receive her degree in psychology from Oklahoma State University in May, gets married in June. "I was worried about the past getting in the way of my future," she wrote in 2011. "Bad things will happen, and I have learned to accept that, but if bad things didn't happen to us, if we didn't have those moments of weakness, we wouldn't be able to enjoy the good nearly as much."

Surviving "has its challenges," says Rebecca.

"I have to keep reminding myself it's true," says Joe (at age 1).

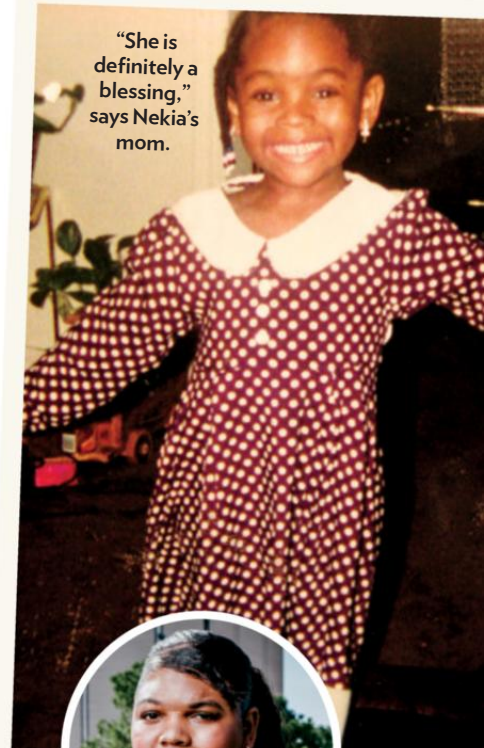

'Truthfully I don't think I have come fully to terms with it'

Joe Webber, 21

Age then: 20 months

The bombing broke his jaw and left arm, but for a long time the imprint on Joe went no deeper than the slight scar above his left eye and another that curves across his cheek. Then, on a random practice run as a high school hurdler, the magnitude of what he'd endured suddenly took hold. Stopped on the track, he realized "that I was in a tragic event so terrible that it's amazing that I escaped alive," says the artist and junior zoology major at Oklahoma State University. "I am so lucky to be here and even thinking about this." Alert to the resilience he shares with his city and nation, he sees it reflected in the "survivor tree," an American elm badly damaged in the blast that has bloomed again and again on the memorial grounds. "The tree is my favorite part," he says. "It's a great symbol of strength."

Age then: 4 years

With the spring opening of Frontier City amusement park, Nekia looks forward to multiple spins on a ride called the Tornado. "I get her a season pass," says her mom, Lavern, 52, who works for the Oklahoma Employment Security Commission. "Most of the time she goes with her friends." Indeed, Nekia enjoys independence few expected when a traumatic brain injury from the blast left her in a coma for a month. "I guess at that time, I was thinking she was going to be okay, she could relearn everything, because she was so young. It was hard, but you pulled through it." Quiet and sweet, Nekia is "at the level of a 6- or 7-year-old." But her ambitions aim higher. She rides public transit Monday through Friday to work at a center for young people with disabilities, likes to bowl, shop and visit the library, and knows how to cook her favorite meal of tacos. She talks about driving. "She can drive a go-kart, but I know that's not the same," says her mom. "She wants a boyfriend. I'm hoping one day she will find a nice guy that maybe has some certain challenges like her. She says she wants to get married too. I'm hoping she'll have that day."

'Through the darkness I found a silver lining: I see the best in people'

Christopher Nguyen, 25 Age then: 5 years

At first, when Christopher asked about the bald scar on the back of his head, his parents told him it occurred in a fall. "We didn't want him to think about that and feel different," recalls his mother, Phuong Nguyen, 55. But as Christopher learned the truth of his injury, he also came to an awareness of what he'd been feeling. "As a child I could only describe my emotions as far as 'feeling bad,' whereas I can now readily restate it as survivor's guilt," he says. Naturally upbeat, he graduated from the University of Oklahoma with a business degree, works two jobs and says the tragedy has pulled him closer to those in his life. "I'm very appreciative that I'm alive and that my parents can see me grow," he says. "The other people, they won't ever get that chance."

Finding My Daughter

IN A NEW MEMOIR, THE ACTRESS CHRONICLES
HER 22-YEAR SEARCH FOR THE CHILD
SHE GAVE UP FOR ADOPTION BY MARY GREEN

LONG-AWAITED BOND

"We went as slowly as we could," Mulgrew says of reconnecting with daughter Danielle (with her in New York City on April 2).

The moment Kate Mulgrew first heard her daughter Danielle's voice, "time stopped," she recalls. It was early morning in her trailer on the set of Star Trek: Voyager when the star received the call she'd been desperately awaiting since giving Danielle up for adoption 22 years earlier. "I remember the notes dancing in the first light of dawn in the venetian blinds," she says of that life-changing phone call in 1999. "I lowered my voice—hers was very high, and I could sense her anxiety." Some 3,000 miles away, Danielle was pacing at her adoptive parents' home in Boston. "It was like overload times a bazillion," recalls Danielle, 37. "She said, 'I need to come and meet you.' I remember three questions came from her: 'Are you pretty?' 'Are you happy?' And then the

By her own description, it has been “a crooked path.” The second of eight kids in an Irish Catholic family, she credits her mom, Joan, with instilling in her a fierce survival instinct. “I was as crucial to my mother as she was to me,” she says. “If you have that in your being from the time you’re born, you’re going to be okay.” At 19, Mulgrew nabbed a starring role on the ’70s soap Ryan’s Hope. Two years later she found herself single and pregnant. (The baby’s father was her ex-boyfriend David Bernstein.) Her mom declined to help her raise the baby. “I knew I couldn’t do it without her,” says Mulgrew, who signed adoption papers with Catholic Charities before delivering a girl on May 3, 1977. The baby was immediately whisked away (see excerpt), and in the days and decades that followed, “I could not have predicted the size of my regret, of my pain,” she says. “I immediately tried to find her. I did a lot of stumbling, a lot of crying.”

third one was, ‘Do you believe in God?’ That is Kate in a nutshell. I love her to death, but she brings a lot.”

Stunningly candid about everything from the search for her daughter to aging in Hollywood, the actress—who turns 60 on April 29—brings it all in her arresting new memoir Born with Teeth. (Yes, she had them at birth.) “If you had said when I was 15, ‘This is what is going to happen,’ I would have been incredulous,” says Mulgrew, relaxing in her eclectic, art-filled Manhattan apartment as she reflects on her journey from ambitious Iowa schoolgirl to Emmy-nominated star of Netflix’s hit series Orange Is the New Black. “But when you’re actually set on the path of your life, you must take it. I had my walking stick, and I took it.”

Her Crushing Goodbye

“Can I help you?” the nurse asks.

“Yes, I think so,” I reply. “I had a baby this afternoon, and I was wondering if I could see my baby.”

The beautiful young nurse stops to consider me. “What is your name?”

“Kate Mulgrew.”

She consults the large journal on her desk. “The birth record shows that your baby is to be put up for adoption. Hospital policy forbids the birth mother to see her baby under these circumstances. You understand.”

I do not nod. My pulse races. The good nurse whispers, “If you go quickly down the hall you’ll see the nursery. Stop in front of the window and I’ll pull up the blinds. But you need to hurry.”

Down the hall, she points to the front row. And there on the front of the bassinet is the label clearly marked: BABY GIRL MULGREW.

I press my face against the glass. Strain to see her. Tiny brown face under a pink cap, pink cap over black curls, miniature fists suddenly escaping from the blanket, opening and closing. I put my hands to the window, can’t be helped, and my face is flattened against the pane and then thwack! The venetian blinds are dropped, the nursery disappears.

I turn in bewilderment, but the nurse is adjusting her cap and saying just under her breath, “That’s enough now, you need to go.”

That's something even cats find amazing.

In 1982 she suffered another brutal blow when, after meeting friends for drinks, she was raped at knifepoint in the entrance to her New York City apartment building. Recalling the attack, she says, “I thought, ‘If I just keep my eyes on him he won’t cut me.’ And he didn’t.” Though her assailant was never caught, Mulgrew says, “I never blamed him. It was absolutely impersonal.”

Putting the pieces of her life back together, Mulgrew says, “I made it my business to try to heal.” She wed director Robert Egan later that year, and they soon welcomed sons Ian and Alec. In the thick of child-rearing, she also became a pop-culture icon as the first-ever female Starfleet captain in Star Trek history. “I was scrutinized a lot,” she says. “I know the studio was thinking, ‘If this doesn’t work, we’re gonna go right to a man.’ I’m glad they didn’t.”

Through it all, she continued to search for her daughter via a series of private investigators. “The pain was excruciating,” she says. “I thought, ‘How do I give this up entirely?’”

In 1999 Mulgrew finally got a break from Sister Una McCormack of Catholic Charities, when the two ran into each other at a Manhattan fund-raiser. Although McCormack had previously told Mulgrew she couldn’t be of much help, “she had a change of heart,” says the actress, and agreed to send documents to both mother and daughter.

Learning her biological mom was an actress of Star Trek fame, “I thought, ‘Please can I have a normal situation? Why does Star Trek have to be involved?’” recalls Danielle, whose middle-class Italian-American parents were supportive of her decision to connect with Mulgrew. When the pair met in Boston four days after their initial phone call, “I was utterly disconnected from my body,” says Danielle. “I was a zombie.”

But not a judgmental one. “One of Danielle’s great virtues is her compassion,” says Mulgrew. “She could look at me almost objectively and say, ‘This woman did the only thing she could do in the moment.’” Both women were astonished by their similarities. “We look alike, talk alike, laugh alike,” says Mulgrew.

‘I told Danielle, “This is the rare story. You are rare. You were able to forgive”’

Still, adjusting to the new relationship was challenging. “There were a lot of unexpected reactions and hurts,” says Danielle, who teaches yoga in Washington State. Now Danielle regularly sees not only her birth mom—who divorced Egan in 1995 and married her current husband, Democratic politician Tim Hagan, the same year—but also her half brothers Ian, 31, and Alec, 30. “We’re peas from the same pod,” she says. “When we’re together, the three of us just get each other.”

As for Mulgrew, she focuses on her “amazing, rare relationship” with Danielle and refuses to dwell on regret: “She grew up loved. That is all that is necessary.” Currently enjoying a career high with her role as Russian inmate “Red” on OITNB, which kicks off its third season on June 12, Mulgrew has embraced the unglamorous role. “For most of my life, I was very pretty and played the heroine,” she says. “You’re very boxed in when you’re pretty. When I unlatched and let my vanity go, then [Red] came.” Both onscreen and off, “this is the most realized time of my life,” she says. “So by virtue of that, it has to be the happiest. I feel completely present. That’s something I couldn’t have said in the past.” ●

TWO OF A KIND

“There’s so much love,” Danielle says of her relationship with Mulgrew. “I’m so grateful we could know each other.”

She's Got Game

ONCE SHE WAS AN UNKNOWN KID FROM ENGLAND.
NOW SHE TOTALLY RULES ON GAME OF THRONES

By LYNETTE RICE | Photograph by CHRIS FLOYD

SANSA SENSATIONAL

"She's finally becoming her own person and taking control," says Turner of her character (top inset, with Aiden Gillen). Off-camera she loves to pal around with costar Maisie Williams.

Talk about growing up fast: Sophie Turner had no idea what to expect when she landed the role of put-upon Sansa Stark in HBO's violent, racy and highly addictive Game of Thrones. She was only 13, had never read the George R.R. Martin books that inspired the series, and it was her first professional gig. "Everyone was reading lines," says Turner. "Then it would get to a sex scene, and I was like, 'Now I know what kind of show this is!'"

Turner, 19, the youngest daughter of a retired business-consultant father and former teacher mother, got her show business start as a kid, doing local theater in her hometown of Warwick, England. Early exposure to Thrones' gory universe made Turner feel like "the most mature person in the world. I thought, 'I can't be doing anything like Disney right now. I have to go and be an adult!'" Her character has had to wise up quickly too. Once naive, Stark has witnessed her father's execution, outlived a royal husband as sadistic as Caligula (he was poisoned) and survived a murder attempt by her own aunt.

This season the young widow may be forced to wed another degenerate deni-zen of feudal Westeros—if her protector-tormentor, the lascivious Littlefinger (Aiden Gillen) doesn't get his hooks into her first. "Sansa goes through a lot of hardships," says Turner during a visit to the more congenial kingdom of Beverly Hills. "She can't seem to catch a break!"

In Hollywood the opposite is true. The 5'9" blonde (she dyes her hair auburn for GOT) is a rising talent with a host of hot upcoming roles: Later this year she'll star in the indie comedy Barely Lethal, opposite Jessica Alba, and in Alone, with Ray Liotta; then she'll go on to play the author of Frankenstein in Mary Shelley's Monster and superheroine Jean Grey in X-Men Apocalypse. She nabbed that last part in a decidedly modern way. "I started getting a ton of tweets saying they were recasting Jean Grey as an 18-year-old," says the Twitter-obsessed Turner. "So I e-mailed my agent."

Offscreen she's settling into a new home in London not far from her best pal, Maisie Williams, who plays her little sister Arya on GOT. They hit the night scene while trying not to do "stupid things." "Sophie's grounded," says Gillen. "But it's all quite dazzling, what she's up to." ●

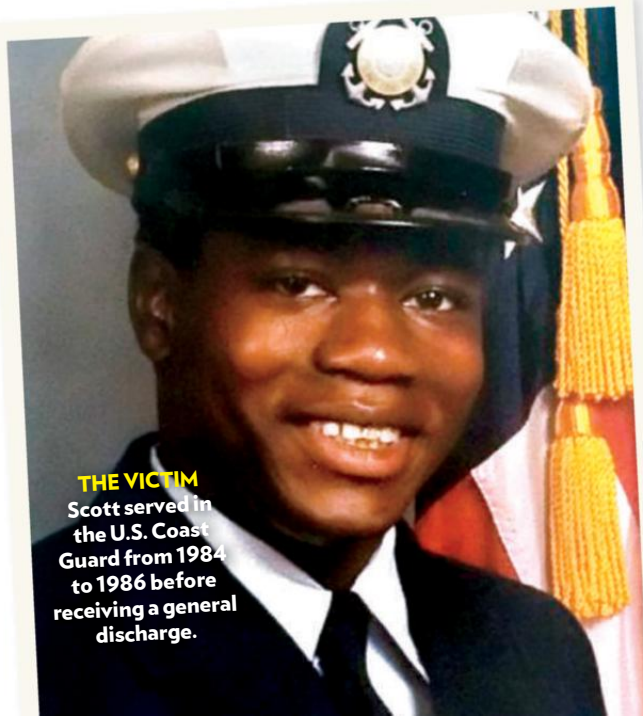

A KILLING CAUGHT ON VIDEO

After yet another fatal police shooting of an unarmed black man—Walter Scott—a family, community and nation express heartbreak and outrage

Walter Scott was a hardworking forklift operator, a football fan (he loved the Dallas Cowboys), the outgoing middle brother from a close-knit religious family. “He was well-known and well-liked throughout the community,” Stanley Weldon, a member of his church, tells PEOPLE.

Memories of the 50-year-old Coast Guard veteran—and shock and outrage over his death—are all family and friends have to hang on to since North Charleston, S.C., Police Officer Michael Slager, 33, fired eight rounds, three of which hit him in his back, after Scott fled from a traffic stop April 4. The fatal run-in, captured by a passerby on his cell phone video camera, stunned a nation already grappling with a string of deadly police shootings of unarmed black men. “I know he’s 50, but he’s my child,” Scott’s mother, Judy, told NBC News of viewing her son’s last moments. “I saw him running like you would kill an animal... It was too heartbreaking.” Those who study police tactics say there’s no apparent justification for the shooting. “Scott was not a threat at the time he was shot,” says Geoffrey Alpert, a criminologist and deadly-force expert at the University of South Carolina in Columbia.

Unlike officials in other recent cases involving police shootings of African-Americans (see sidebar), police and prosecutors took quick action—arresting Slager, charging him with murder and firing him from the force. Slager’s attorney Andy Savage said he has initiated his own investigation; his mother, Karen Sharpe, 58, told The New York Times, “I can’t fathom that Michael would ever do anything to hurt anybody purposely.”

Whatever motivated Slager, it was left to Scott’s family and friends to make sense of a senseless death. (Scott, a divorced father of four who was engaged to be married, was behind in child support—which some speculated was the reason he fled when Slager stopped him for a broken tail-light.) At Scott’s funeral on April 11, his daughter Samantha, 24, read a poem to the hundreds gathered at W.O.R.D. Ministries Christian Center in Summerville, S.C. “I cry every time I think about you,” she said. “Every breath I take, I’ll remember that you gave it to me.”

NOW SHINING ON DANCING WITH THE STARS, BRUCE AND DEMI'S DAUGHTER GETS CANDID ABOUT HER CHILDHOOD, HER FAMILY AND LEARNING TO LOVE HER LOOKS

Standing in front of a dressing-room mirror at a Hollywood studio, Rumer Willis slips on a sleek black blazer and stares at herself in disbelief. "I just can't believe how much I look like my mom right now," she says with a laugh. "It's trippy." For the oldest daughter of Demi Moore and Bruce Willis, feeling comfortable in her own skin hasn't always come easy. Since her teens, she has endured nasty online comments about her looks and famous family. "It was really hard," she says. "I would read that stuff and feel awful. I thought, 'I don't even get a chance?'"

Now on ABC's Dancing with the Stars, Rumer, 26, is winning fans over with her new confidence—and she's thrilled to be showing the world who she really is. "People have such an immediate judgment of me because I have tattoos or because my hair is sometimes crazy,"

"I don't know anyone else who grew up the way I did," says Rumer (center, with Scout, Bruce and Demi in 1996).

A Halloween flashback with sisters Tallulah and Scout. "We were each other's best friends" growing up, Rumer says of the three. 5. All smiles with Demi. 6. The Willis girls with Bruce. 7. Interlochen Arts Academy in Michigan. 8. From left: Tallulah, Demi and Scout at a fashion event in November. "They're all really stoked," says Rumer of her family's support for her turn on Dancing with the Stars.

she explains. "[They think] I'm this reckless child of famous parents." With Demi, Bruce and her sisters cheering in the audience, Rumer and her DWTS partner, Valentin Chmerkovskiy, have shattered expectations, shooting to the top of the leaderboard from the start. "She has a very strong work ethic," says Chmerkovskiy. "It's a pleasure to work with someone who has that type of spirit."

Her spirited personality comes from a childhood that was anything but typical. Born in Paducah, Ky., while her father was filming In Country, Rumer grew up traveling between film sets and a home base in rural Hailey, Idaho. The lifestyle, she admits, had its pros and cons. "I've traveled to some really incredible places, but my basic math skills are horrendous," she says, laughing. "It's an interesting trade-off." After Bruce and Demi divorced in 2000, they stayed extraordinarily friendly. "We didn't have to split up the holidays or birthdays," Rumer says, crediting her parents for a happy childhood but one that was at times isolating. She grew very close to her two sisters, Scout, now 23, and Tallulah, 21, but struggled to find friends. "In high school I had a much easier time interacting with adults than with my peers," she explains. "So that [period] was a weird transition."

While Rumer made her acting debut at 7 alongside her mom in Now and Then and appeared in Demi's Striptease the next year, her parents were "hesitant of letting me do the whole child-actor thing," she says. But she had a passion for performing. "My sisters and I used to put on shows in our living room. There was a Destiny's Child 'Bills, Bills, Bills' phase," she says, giggling. "In Idaho there's not a whole lot to do." After finishing high school at the insistence of her parents, Willis enrolled in the University of Southern California but dropped out after a semester. "It wasn't my jam," she says. So she enrolled in acting and voice lessons while working at a Marc Jacobs boutique and started auditioning, landing film roles in The House Bunny and Sorority Row as well as small TV parts.

Rumer says she “would love to win”
Dancing with the Stars.
“I’m definitely competitive.”

‘My sisters are hilarious. I’m the shy one’

Despite her parents’ fame, she says, she was “ill-prepared” for the spotlight. “I’d been living in a bubble. I would go to an event and I didn’t realize I needed to do my makeup.” And online, “people really started getting ugly. . . . People always say, ‘You signed up for this, you’re an actor,’ but I used to take it really personally.” She’s since learned that “if you let your value be determined by what other people think, you’re screwed.”

Her family has weathered its share of personal drama, she says, through unconditional love and support. Rumer stuck close to Demi’s side during Demi’s divorce from Ashton Kutcher in 2011 and hospitalization in 2012. She recently choked up on DWTS when discussing Tallulah’s honesty about her rehab stay last year (for body issues, depression and drug use). She’s doing well now, Rumer says: “She’s so creative and funny and dynamic. She’s owning who she is, and it’s awesome.” Scout, a graduate of Brown University, sings in the band Gus + Scout. “My sisters and I have so much love for each other,” Rumer says. They’re also close to Bruce’s wife, Emma Heming, and their half sisters Mabel, 3, and Evelyn, 11 months. “My dad, God bless him with five daughters! That’s got to be some kind of karma for a past life.”

When not in dance rehearsals, Rumer is enjoying single life in Los Angeles, playing with her five dogs and hunting for the city’s best french fries. And the future? She “100 percent” wants her own big happy family down the line and isn’t stressing about her next break. “If I got a TV show, I would be super-stoked,” she says. “But I would really love to do Broadway. For the first time in my life I’ve gotten to a place where I’m really stoked about just taking care of myself and figuring out what I want.” ●

The Untold Story Rock Hudson's Final Days

30 YEARS AGO, THE MOVIE ICON REVEALED HE HAD AIDS. INSIDE HIS DESPERATE STRUGGLE, HIS LAST GOODBYES AND HOW HIS LEGACY CHANGED THE WORLD

By ELIZABETH McNEIL

Hudson's illness made the public pay attention—and “gave patients hope more would be done,” says Dr. Michael Gottlieb. Right: PEOPLE's Sept. 23, 1985, issue.

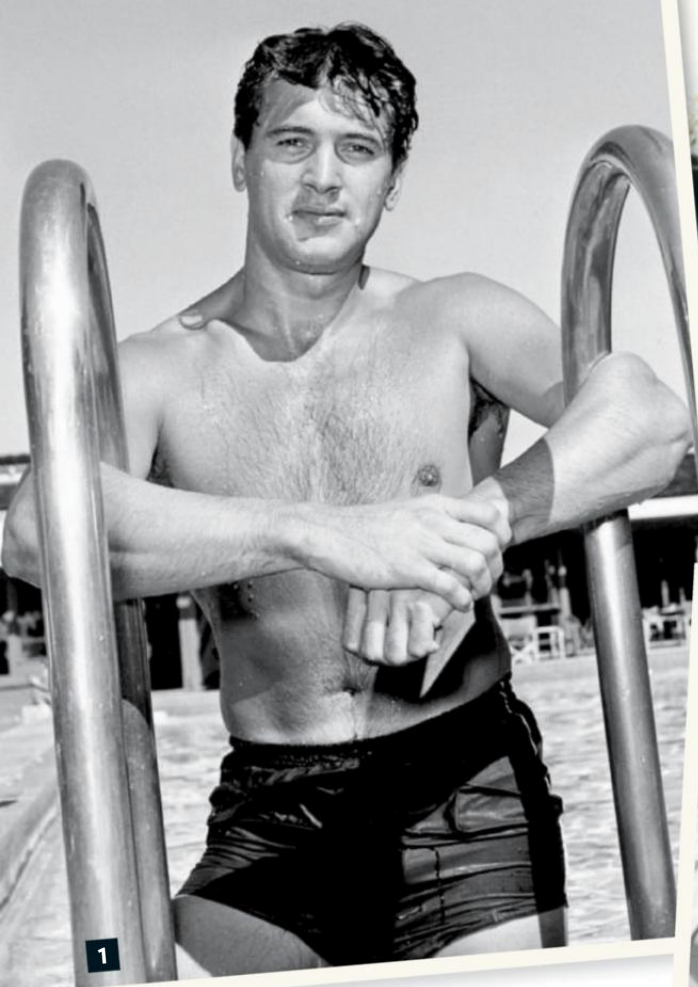

At 6'4", with a dimpled smile and a sweet sexiness that left a generation of women swooning, Rock Hudson was the perfect Hollywood leading man, ruling the box office in the 1950s and '60s with movies like Giant and Pillow Talk. Yet behind the easy charm he had a secret: Hudson was gay, something that most Americans only discovered with the actor's death on Oct. 2, 1985. “It was career suicide to reveal you were gay,” says his one-time boyfriend Lee Garlington. In July 1985 Hudson collapsed in Paris, and his French publicist revealed he had AIDS. Less than three months later he was dead at 59, the first well-known celebrity to die from a then little-understood plague that stoked homophobia and terrified the public. His death marked a turning point in how Americans viewed the disease. “People talk about AIDS before Rock Hudson and after Rock Hudson,” says his doctor Michael Gottlieb, 67, the immunologist who first identified AIDS as a new disease and is now on the board of the Elizabeth Taylor AIDS Foundation. “When I first met him, I never could have imagined he would be the pivotal person in the history of the AIDS epidemic, the single most influential patient ever.” Thirty years later Gottlieb and others close to Hudson share intimate memories of his struggle—and his legacy.

In early June 1984 Gottlieb got a call from a Beverly Hills doctor with a celebrity patient who wanted to avoid publicity.

Dr. Michael Gottlieb

There sat Rock Hudson up on the exam table. I had to look up at him to make eye contact. “My, you’re tall,” I said. “How tall are you?” And with this shy, boyish

American Idol

1. "He was unbelievably sexy," says Esther Shapiro, who later cast Hudson (in 1954) in Dynasty. "Men and women were drawn to him. There was a sweetness that just sort of lingered there beyond the charisma and the sex appeal." 2. "He called me Eunice," says Doris Day (with Hudson in Pillow Talk in 1959). "He'd holler, 'Eunice, I'll be over in a minute with a doughnut!' We had a marvelous time."

3. Hudson (with Elizabeth Taylor in Giant in 1955) "once drank margaritas for God knows how many hours with Elizabeth one night during the shoot," says Wallace Sheft. "The next morning they were both blurry-eyed and couldn't say one line. The director [George Stevens] told them it was a fantastic performance."

smile, he said, "6'4". He had several lesions of Kaposi sarcoma that established a diagnosis. Little was known about HIV and AIDS then. There wasn't much we could do. Within a week he prepared several letters to past sexual partners. He wanted them to know they'd been with someone diagnosed with AIDS. He didn't reveal his identity. He said, "I want to do the right thing."

We didn't have antivirals then. There was a drug that had worked in retroviruses in mice, HPA-23, which they were using in Paris. I introduced him to [French AIDS researcher] Dr. Dominique Dormont, who conducted the trials. He'd meet Rock at the Ritz Hotel, where he would get infusions of HPA-23 in private.

Hudson kept his diagnosis a secret to all but a few friends. Questions about his health first surfaced when he looked gaunt and frail at a July 15, 1985, public appearance promoting his guest spot on his close friend Doris Day's variety show.

Doris Day

He walked in. I hardly knew him. He was very sick. I'd bring him lunch, fix him a big platter, but he couldn't eat. I'd say "What if I get a fork and feed you?" He'd say, "Doris, I can't eat." He never said he was ill. When we kissed goodbye, he gave me a big hug and held on to me. I was in tears. That was the last time I saw him.

Hudson returned to Paris for more HPA-23 treatments. On July 21 he collapsed in his suite at the Ritz. French publicist Yanou Collart, a friend, was asked to handle the press frenzy.

Yanou Collart

My phone rang at 7 p.m. A French news agency said Rock was at the American Hospital, suffering from liver cancer. I went to the Ritz and met [his secretary] Mark Miller. He said, "Rock has AIDS." Dr. Dormont, a military doctor, was not allowed into the American Hospital, a civilian hospital, to treat Rock. Dormont said he was waiting for authorization from French President François Mitterrand. He said Rock is very good friends with the Reagans and President Reagan will call Mitterrand to ask him for the authorization they need. Time was so short. I got approval [instead] from the French Minister of the Army.

The White House never intervened. In an official July 24 memo, an aide wrote that Nancy Reagan “did not feel this was something the White House should get into.” However, President Reagan called Hudson to check on him.

Mark Miller asked me to give a press conference to say Rock had AIDS. I went to his room. Rock must have lost over 70 lbs. since I had last seen him. He was so thin under the white sheet. I read him the statement. He was too weak to make a decision. I was crying. All he said was, “That’s what they want. Go and give it to the dogs.” At the press conference, they needed barricades to keep people back. Rock was too weak for further treatment. The only way for him to fly home was on a nonstop flight, a 747 or a DC-10. He was too frail to change planes. The American Hospital wanted him out. No airline wanted to take Rock. They wouldn’t believe me if I called asking for a 747, so I called Pierre Salinger, ABC’s chief foreign correspondent in London. He called Air France and got the plane.

Wallace Sheft, Hudson’s business manager

Air France wanted $250,000 for a 747 to fly him home, an enormous amount. They called me from the tarmac to make sure the funds had been wired before they took off. We finally got him home.

Dr. Gottlieb

On July 30 I met Rock on the roof of the UCLA hospital at 2:30 a.m. Here is the most famous individual in the world with HIV, flying in by helicopter. There were news helicopters everywhere. He was weak and barely responsive.

The public was confused by the disclosure in Paris that Rock had AIDS and whether he had authorized the statement. I was advised to give a brief, bare-bones press conference. I spoke to Rock. He was lying down. I said, “The press wants information on your condition. Should I tell them you have AIDS?” and he said, “Yes, if you think it will do some good.” He couldn’t have imagined how much good it actually did. I don’t think Rock was afraid of it getting out any longer. It was beginning to dawn on his fan base that he was gay.

In August, Gottlieb brought Hudson’s friend Elizabeth Taylor for a secret hospital visit. (She later founded the Elizabeth Taylor AIDS Foundation, which has raised over $17 million to date.)

We slipped in one of the back freight doors on the shipping dock to avoid being seen and rode up to the 10th floor. Elizabeth was dressed to the nines. I heard a loud bang and I jumped and said, “What was that?” and she laughed and said “It’s just my jewels.” She’d hit the elevator wall with the Krupp diamond. She was nervous about seeing

His Boyfriend Speaks Out

Rock’s ‘True Love’

Lee Garlington, 77, dated Hudson from 1962 to early 1965. A retired stockbroker, he opened up to PEOPLE in a rare interview about their clandestine romance.

Rock was the biggest movie star in the world, and rumors were he was gay. One day, when I was a movie extra, I stood outside his cottage on the Universal lot to get an eye on him. He walked out and looked back once and kept on walking. A year later I got a phone call: “Would you like to meet Rock Hudson?” I think he had me checked out.

The first time I knocked on his door, I was scared to death. Nothing happened that night, but he said, “Let’s get together.” And so we did. I’d spend the night and sneak out at 6 a.m. and coast down the street without turning on the engine so the neighbors couldn’t hear. Nobody in his right mind came out in those days. We all pretended to be straight. When Rock and I went to a premiere together, we each had our own date. I don’t think we were fooling anybody. We kind of laughed about it. You pretended to date and fall in love. When he would plant a kiss on a leading lady, I’d giggle and think, “Jeez, he does that to me the same way.”

After a female fan broke into his house and slept in his bed [when he was away], he got scared. In a drawer on the side table were pictures of me with no shirt on. She didn’t find them, but it shook him up. He realized he was vulnerable.

He was a romantic. He taught me how to shave properly, how to take the razor down at an angle so it cuts better. One of the reasons we parted ways was because I was the stronger one in the relationship and I wanted him to be. He was a gentle giant.

I didn’t know he was sick until I read it in the papers. When I called his house, I was told it wasn’t worth it [to visit] because he wouldn’t know who I was. When I later read in his biography that he called me his “true love,” I broke down and cried. He said his mother and I were the only people he ever loved. I lost it. I had no idea I meant that much to him.

Left: Garlington and Hudson in New Orleans ca. 1963. Above: Hudson’s only marriage was to secretary Phyllis Gates from 1955–1958. “He told me it was set up by his agent,” says Garlington. “She was a lesbian.”

him for the first time, because she knew how sick he was, not because he had AIDS. Elizabeth asked if it was okay to kiss and hug him. She was worried about his immune system. Not hers.

Jack Scalia, Hudson's costar in his TV series The Devlin Connection

Rock treated me like a son. We watched football on Sundays and ate Mexican food. He told me about having a sled as a kid. A friend had borrowed it and broke it. Afterwards, his dad told him, "You'll never get another sled." When I visited him in the hospital, he was very gaunt with all the telltale signs of AIDS. I brought him a red sled wrapped in Christmas wrapping, but Rock was too weak to open it. "Lift it up," he said. His eyes welled up. That was the most emotional I'd ever seen him. He said, "Well, kid, it's been a great run." When he went home, he had it nailed to his bedroom door.

Wallace Sheft

The last time I saw him was about a week before he died. He was in bed. I told him I was contributing money to a fund, the Rock Hudson Memorial Fund for AIDS Research. He was pleased. He said, "Go ahead," but was too weak to say more. I donated $250,000 because I was angry at the goddamn airline for charging that much to fly him out. That money eventually became the seed money for amfAR, the first national foundation for AIDS research.

Hudson died at home on Oct. 2. A former lover, Marc Christian, filed a lawsuit, claiming Rock had endangered him by not telling him he had AIDS. He privately settled and never contracted AIDS.

Dr. Gottlieb

Rock was well aware of the publicity before he died. He was glad he had gone public, that it was having an impact. AIDS was so stigmatized that people with it felt abandoned. All they were looking for was a glimmer of hope, and that only came after Rock went public. It's the pivotal event in the country's consciousness of the HIV epidemic. He showed tremendous courage and allowed his diagnosis to change the face of AIDS. ●

Struggling in Secret

In 1984, Hudson (left) shared a screen kiss on Dynasty with his costar Linda Evans. He didn't divulge he had AIDS, which later caused a scandal. At a White House state dinner, Nancy Reagan told Hudson he looked too thin. He didn't tell her the real reason.

The News Gets Out

Hudson's frail appearance with Doris Day (left) caused alarm. He was later airlifted via 747 and helicopter to UCLA hospital in L.A. His condition was "awful," says Gottlieb. "There was very little that anyone could do."

His Lasting Legacy

The dying Hudson's $250,000 gift helped start amfAR, one of the first national charities for AIDS research. His friend Elizabeth Taylor (with Gottlieb in 1986) was cofounder before launching her own Elizabeth Taylor AIDS Foundation. Hudson "allowed his diagnosis to help others," says Gottlieb.

Broccoli with Bacon

THE NEW YORK CHEF AND AUTHOR OF A GIRL AND HER GREENS GIVES THE CLASSIC VEGETABLE SIDE A FLAVORFUL UPGRADE

1 tbsp. extra-virgin olive oil
¼ lb. thinly sliced bacon, cut into ¾-in. pieces
1 medium head broccoli, cut into florets, stems peeled and cut into 1-in. pieces
1 small Spanish onion, thinly sliced
Pinch red pepper flakes
1 tsp. sea salt
Juice of ½ lemon

1. Heat the oil in a pot over medium-high heat until it shimmers. Add the bacon and cook, stirring and scraping frequently, just until the edges are browned and crispy, 2 to 3 minutes. Use a slotted spoon to transfer the bacon to a bowl, leaving the fat behind.
2. Add the broccoli, stir well, and top with the onions. Cook, without stirring, until the broccoli begins to brown a bit, about 3 minutes; then cook, stirring frequently, until the onions are tender and slightly browned, about 3 minutes more.
3. Reduce heat to medium-low and add the pepper flakes and reserved bacon. Cook, stirring occasionally, for about 5 minutes. Season with salt and cook about 5 minutes more, until the broccoli stems are fully tender and have a slight bite. Transfer to a plate and squeeze lemon juice on top. Serve immediately.
Serves: 4 to 6 Prep time: 10 minutes Cook time: 20 minutes

Tea-Brined Fried Chicken

THE OWNERS OF NEW YORK CITY HOT SPOT SWEET CHICK SERVE UP A MEAL THAT'S CRUNCHY, JUICY AND SATISFYING

- ½ cup sweet tea
- 1 tbsp. dried oregano
- 1 tbsp. garlic powder
- 2 tbsp. dried thyme, divided
- 7 tbsp. kosher salt, divided
- 2 tbsp. plus 1½ tsp. ground black pepper, divided
- 1 whole chicken or 10 separate chicken pieces (thighs, drumsticks, wings and breasts)
- 2 cups buttermilk
- 4 cups flour
- ¼ cup cornstarch
- 1 tbsp. paprika
- 4 cups vegetable oil

1. Combine ½ gallon water, sweet tea, oregano, garlic powder, 1 tbsp. thyme, 6 tbsp. salt and 2 tbsp. black pepper in a large pot to create a brine.

Add the chicken pieces, cover, and refrigerate for 24 hours.

2. Remove chicken from brine, and pat dry with paper towels.

3. Pour buttermilk in a large bowl. In a second large bowl, combine flour, cornstarch, paprika, 1 tbsp. thyme, 1 tbsp. kosher salt, and 1½ tsp. black pepper.

4. Dredge each piece of chicken in the flour mixture to completely coat, then shake well to remove the excess. Then dip chicken completely in the buttermilk, then dredge again in the flour mixture.

5. Add the vegetable oil to a 12-in. cast-iron or heavy-bottomed skillet and heat to 300°. Carefully place half the chicken pieces into the pan. Cook chicken in oil for 15 to 20 minutes, flipping once, until the chicken is golden-brown and crispy, and the internal temperature reaches 165°. Let the cooked chicken drain on paper towels or a wire rack set over a baking sheet. Return the oil to 300° and repeat with the remaining pieces.

Serves: 4

Prep time: 20 minutes, plus brining time

Cook time: 30 to 40 minutes

Expert Tip

'Brining is the best way to get that juicy flavor down to the bone—it's what all of us are looking for in our fried chicken,' says Seymour

The Verdict "Carla does a good job getting in greens and other veggies at her 'normal' meals," says dietitian Keri Glassman of NutritiousLife.com. "But since she has so many bites at the show, I would suggest a solid breakfast (so she isn't starving when she does taste the decadent items)! When she's not taking bites—by the way, great job just tasting and not gorging—she should aim for those meals to be as 'clean' and lean as possible. And well done on hydration!"

If You Were Exposed to, or Harmed by, ASBESTOS or ASBESTOS-CONTAINING Products Made, Distributed or Sold by THE FLINTKOTE COMPANY or FLINTKOTE MINES LIMITED,

Please read this Notice of Voting Rights and Hearing to consider whether to approve Reorganization.

TYPES OF PRODUCTS

During the 1930s to the 1980s, products sold by The Flintkote Company and Flintkote Mines Limited (the “Debtors”) may have contained asbestos. These products could have included floor tile, roofing shingles, joint compound, cement pipe, asphalt and other products.

Persons or entities exposed to, or harmed by, the Debtors’ asbestos or asbestos-containing products may have personal injury, wrongful death or other claims against the Debtors. You do not need to (i) have been diagnosed, (ii) have symptoms, or (iii) be impaired to be affected by the Plan.

If you believe you may have been exposed to, or harmed by the Debtors’ products, you may be entitled to vote on the terms of the Reorganization. You should carefully read this notice and the important documents located at <http://www.flintkotebankruptcy.com>.

PLAN OF REORGANIZATION

The Debtors have filed for bankruptcy. On February 9, 2015, the Debtors filed a modified Joint Plan of Reorganization (the “Plan”) with the United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of Delaware (the “Bankruptcy Court”). The Plan includes the terms of a settlement reached between the Debtors and their former indirect parent company, Imperial Tobacco Canada Limited (“ITCAN”). The Plan has been jointly proposed by the Debtors, the Asbestos Claimants Committee and the Future Claimants Representative (collectively, the “Plan Proponents”). As background, the Plan is a modified version of a bankruptcy plan on which Debtors previously solicited votes in 2008 and 2009, and which was confirmed by the Bankruptcy Court on December 21, 2012 (the “Original Plan”).

A document describing the Plan’s changes (the “Disclosure Supplement”), which the Bankruptcy Court approved on March 17, 2015, and a copy of the Plan itself and voting materials (a “Resolicitation Package”), has been mailed to known holders of claims against the Debtors or their lawyers.

THE TRUST

The Plan provides for a trust to be established to pay eligible asbestos personal injury claims against the Debtors (the “Trust”). The Plan states that all current and future holders of asbestos personal injury claims will be forever prohibited from asserting claims directly against the Debtors and other parties protected under the Plan, including ITCAN. Such persons can receive money only from the Trust. The Plan and the Disclosure Supplement have important additional details and are available at <http://www.flintkotebankruptcy.com>.

SUPPLEMENTAL SETTLEMENT BAR ORDER

Under the Plan, ITCAN will also obtain protection from certain claims by a settlement bar order, which is described more particularly in the Plan and Disclosure Supplement.

VOTING PROCEDURES

The Bankruptcy Court has issued an order describing who can vote on the Plan, how to vote, and how votes will be counted. The Disclosure Supplement has information that will help you decide whether and how to vote on the Plan if you are entitled to do so. Votes cast on the Original Plan will be counted as votes on the Plan, unless a holder changes such vote. If you voted on the Original Plan and do not wish to change your vote, you do not need to submit a ballot. If you did not vote on the Original Plan, you may obtain and cast a ballot, which would be subject to the Plan Proponents’ right to object. To be counted, a completed ballot must be received by the Voting Agent at the address below by 4:00 p.m. (prevailing Eastern time) on June 2, 2015. Any ballot received after that deadline will not be counted.

Proof of an asbestos personal injury or wrongful death claim does not need to be filed with the Bankruptcy Court. Special procedures have been established for holders of asbestos personal injury and wrongful death claims to vote on the Plan. Lawyers for holders of these claims may vote on the Plan on behalf of their clients if authorized by their client. If you are unsure whether your lawyer is authorized to vote on your behalf, please contact your lawyer.

THE HEARING TO CONFIRM THE PLAN

A hearing to confirm the Plan will be held before the Honorable Mary F. Walrath, United States Bankruptcy Judge, at the United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of Delaware, 824 Market Street, 5th Floor, Wilmington, Delaware 19801, commencing on August 10, 2015 at 10:30 a.m. (prevailing Eastern time). You may attend the hearing but are not required to do so.

OBJECTING TO THE PLAN

Objections to the Plan are limited to changes between the Original Plan and the Plan and must be submitted in writing and received by July 8, 2015 to be considered. All objections must comply with the requirements in the notice of the Confirmation Hearing, available at <http://www.flintkotebankruptcy.com>.

HOW TO OBTAIN DOCUMENTS

If you would like additional information about the Plan, Disclosure Supplement and the Trust (including copies of the Plan and the Disclosure Supplement), you may contact the Debtors’ Voting Agent at (800) 290-0537 or visit <http://www.flintkotebankruptcy.com>.

DEAR READER,

I am so excited to be guest editing PEOPLE's beauty pages this week! Working with Avon's mark. brand for the past two years, I've had the chance to indulge my inner product junkie, and I can't wait to share some of the tips I've learned! I've also been inspired by the amazing things the company does for women, which has helped shape my personal beauty philosophy. I believe that embracing what makes you different or unique is what makes you beautiful.

HOW SHE GETS HER GLOW!

"What's cool about this palette is that there are different shades in it," says the Pretty Little Liars star. "It works on any skin tone and leaves your face looking dewy."

ON HER AMAZING EYEBROWS...

My favorite feature is my really thick eyebrows! But, I hated them as a kid. I inherited my dad's brows. I went through a phase where I overplucked them and that looked terrible. Finally in my late teens I fell in love with them and I found a shape that really works for my face. I've never gotten them professionally done, I do them myself! My advice is don't get too ambitious and stick to your natural shape. I always have tweezers, I keep them in my purse. And I've tried a lot of different brow pencils, but I always go back to this Dior one.

WHAT LUCY LOVES!

All About Lucy!

HER NEW SHORT DO!

First, tell us why you cut your hair!

I've always had long hair, it was my security blanket. When we wrapped season 5 of Pretty Little Liars, I wanted to do something drastic, so I showed up at the salon and said, "Do whatever you want." Now I can't imagine having long hair. You're 25, any signs of a quarter-life crisis? It's so funny because

I still look like I'm 17 years old, but while I was on the set of PLL last year my hairstylist found a gray hair. I was like, "Get it out!"

Speaking of PLL, what do you think about your character's style? After playing Aria for so many years, I've grown to love the outlandish, weird things she wears. I actually get excited to go to fittings and say, "Let's go crazier."

We need to know: What's your spirit animal? A unicorn, because they're very mysterious and more than meets the eye. Do you have date night makeup? I haven't been on a date in a long time, but I like a little contour and a light smoky eye. When do you feel your most beautiful? After a facial, I love having really clean skin. I struggled with it growing up and am finally at the point where I feel comfortable going out without any makeup on. Do you have any bad beauty habits? I have three. I drink way too much coffee—I'm obsessed with it—and not enough water, I pick at zits and I go through phases where I bite my nails.

One Last Thing

Reba

The country music icon, 60, recently released her new album Love Somebody

Last kiss

That would be [my husband] Narvel, right before he left town. He's in Los Angeles for work, and I'm taking care of business here in Nashville. I miss him when we're apart. But we never leave each other without a kiss and an "I love you."

Last indulgence

A couple of good friends took me to Union Common here in Nashville for my birthday. I split an apple crisp and bacon ice cream with one of them and an espresso-chocolate thing with the other. So I got two desserts!

Last time

I was starstruck

Bruno Mars at the Kennedy Center Honors. I've gone to a lot of his concerts and felt like we communicated through his music, even though that was only in my mind! When we finally did meet, I felt like I had known him forever.

Last sunburn

A long, long time ago, but as a redhead you don't ever forget them. When I go to Mexico, it's with sunscreen, long sleeves, pants, a hat and sometimes an umbrella with my hat!

Last thing I cooked

A buddy came out to the house and we went walking around the property, then I made salmon, brussels sprouts and green beans. It was very healthy.
